BRILLIANTS.

FROM THE GRENAN.

In the old cathedral resting,
Two comms press the stones;
One holds the great King Ottmar,
And one the poet's bones.

High in his power, the monarch Ancestral glories led; The sword lies in his right hand, And the crown upon his head.

The minatrel near the proud king is laid in quiet steep;
His lifeless hands enfolded.
His gentle barp to keep.

Castle and towers are falling.
The war-ery fills the land;
But the sword it moveth never in the dead king's hand.

Through valleys sweet with blossoms Mild breezes float along, And the poets harp is sounding In never-dying song.

Il PNo more beautiful lesson has been taught by a nodern poet than in those stanzar by Whittier. Adam and Eve, exiled from the Garden, had sat down disonsolately on the outer side of the wall of Puradise, and there an angel found them bewalling their fate. Thereupon the radiant presence spoke:

"Arise!" he said, "why look behind When hope is all before. And patient hand and willing mind, Your loss may yet restore?

"! leave you with a spell whose power Can make this desert glad. And call around you fruit and flower, As fair as Eden had.

"I clothe your hands with power to life The curse from off your soil, Your very doom shall seem a gift, Your loss a gain through Toil.

"Go, cheerful as yon humming bees.
To labor as to play."
While glesming over Eden's trees,
The Augel passed away. The pilgrams of the world went forth

Obedient to the word,
And found where'er they tilled the earth,
A garden of the Lord:

Once more, oh, white-winged Anget, stand, Where man still pines and grieves, And lead through Toil to Eden-Land, New Adams and new Eves!

That he is honest, no one doubts; he has sacrificed to his fatalism his brightest hopes of political advancement-has offered up on the shrine of that necessity which he worships all that can excite to ambition, even the Presidency of the United States. But to my story. The other morning at the breakfast-table, where I, an unobserved spectator, happened to be present, Calhoun was observed to gaze frequently at his right hand, and brushed it with his left in a hurried and nervous manner .-He did this so often that it excited attention. At length one of the persons composing the breakfast party - his name I think is Toombs, and he is a member of Congress from Georga-took upon himself to inquire as to the occasion of Mr. Calhoun's disquietude.

"Does your hand pain you?" he asked of Mr. C.

To this Mr. Calhoun replied, in rather flurried manner. "Pshaw! It is nothing! Only a dream had last night, which makes me see perpetually a large black spot, like an ink blotch, on the back of my right hand. An optical illusion, I suppose.

Of course these words excited the curiosity of the company, but no one ven-tured to beg the detail of this singular dream, until Mr. Toombs asked quietly: "What was your dream like? I'm not
